If you care for your boys now ever get into trouble again I will see that the benefit of a doubt and that is all. And as for you, Johnson, I will say that the jury has been very lenient." When the judge finished speaking the boys hid their faces behind their hats and were standing near them. Johnson's fine was stayed by his father and the trio left, passing jocular remarks back and forth. Prosecutor Ruckelshaus said of the decision: "I am greatly disappointed in the verdict. Unless juries lay aside all prejudice and mete out the punishment such offenders deserve the next thing Indianapolis will have will be a race riot, and perhaps after a few innocent people are killed then justice will be done. The jurors who returned the verdict argued that it was the first offense of the boys and that many witnesses had testified to their good character.

The public does not go to performances of the classic drama because it cares more to have its emotions stirred than it does to exercise its intellect. No man will dare to deny the genius of Shakspeare; most men affirm it because of their vague idea of the dramatist and their clear knowledge that reverence for him is in the air. Most men advise their children to see Shakspeare. Most actors love to play the classic dramas. They like to strut about the stage and to feel the fine phrases rolling off the end of their tongues. But Mr. McLean has put his money and his heart into the productions that he is now offering, and it is to be hoped that in other cities he may win more patronage than he has or will here. It is possible that he may become one of the many martyrs to Shakspeare, whose name is legion. May he have a better fate.
